Note

During a vacation spent in West Wardsboro, Vermont it seemed worth while to copy the inscriptions in the cemeteries of that neighborhood. Inquiry of the Vermont Historical Society showed that there were no such records on file in its library and its officers had no knowledge that they had ever been copied or printed. The 14 cemeteries so treated are naturally those nearest to and most easily reached from our vacation home. They include all known graveyards in the town of Wardsboro and some others in those parts of Stratton, Dover and Jamaica which lie nearest to Wardsboro. Nearly 2100 names are listed.

The earliest burials were during the last decade of the eighteenth century, and were evidently the remains of the first permanent settlers in this part of the state.

Remote from any large cities, well back in the hills, this region, of exceptional quietness and beauty and dominated by the huge mass of Stratton mountain, has always been sparsely settled and is now steadily decreasing in population. Abandoned farms are the rule not the exception. Stratton and West Jamaica are instances of entirely abandoned villages while West Wardsboro seems likely soon to be left without inhabitants. The war is hastening this result by taking nearly all the young men.

All this brings desolation to the burying-grounds which are thus left behind by the receding wave of settlement. Fences are broken down; despite the Vermont law requiring two annual mowings, the tall grass and rank brush spring up and dry away; fires sweep across the plot; stones fall and become covered and the memorials of the dead disappear. In one place the stones from the cemetery were used to build a line fence.

That these conditions make it specially desirable to preserve the burial records of the vicinity is emphasized by the fact that already some of the burying-grounds are difficult to learn of and to find.

CEMETERY

80 NAMES

One mile east of village on the upper (Podunk) road to South Wardsboro, to the north of that road and between it and Whetstone Brook. In August 1918, when these inscriptions were copied, this cemetery was much neglected and overgrown. No interments had been made for forty years and but three in over half a century. Several stones were fallen flat and one was dug out of the leaves and dirt to read the inscription herein recorded.

WEST JAMAICA (JAMAICA TOWN)

WINDHAM COUNTY, VERMONT

Cemetery is a few rods below the deserted village of West Jamaica and on the south bank of the Ball Mountain Brook. In August 1918, when these inscriptions were copied, this cemetery was much overgrown and neglected. Earliest burials are 1844, and very few in late years
